RACHEL

This is where you proposed to me. When you did, you reminded me it was where we had our first date. It's also where we first met. Do you remember that? This place is kind of like our Jerusalem. All roads seem to just lead us back here. I went to your house and to the tire shop. I should have known you would've just been here though. Yeah, I would've just, you know, come here first, if you would have picked up your phone or answered my text messages. Instead I had to get on a plane and drive around town, looking for you, like an idiot. You had four months. I hated you for what you did to me at that train station. I hated you! But then when I got to New York, I thought how much you love me and how hard that must have been for you. And I thought, this... this is what a man looks like. This is how a man loves. But you... not telling me where you were for four months and sneaking out before sunrise in the middle of the night, without saying goodbye, that is not being a man, Finn. I don't need you to give me my freedom. I am a grown woman. I don't need you to hide from me, to keep me from doing what is right for me. I didn't do Brody, okay? And don't you think I would have rather been with you? Don't you get it? No matter how rich or famous or successful I become, when it comes to you, I'm... I'm always gonna be that moon-eyes girl who freaked you out at our first glee rehearsal. You were the first boy who made me feel loved and sexy and visible. You are my first love. And... I want more than anything for you to be my last. But I can't do this anymore. At least not now. We're done.
